Artist's Statement: "In the Undressed Art / Why We Draw Peter Steinhart says, 'Drawing a figure is a kind of exploration, a search for our own nature, our origins, our souls.....we draw the figure because it offers us the possibility of seeing deeper into one another's nature, into ourselves, into human nature in general.' The human figure is the most complex and most intriguing of subjects to me, continues Lorraine Stern who signs her extraordinary work as Legsley, there is beauty in the sagging, the lumpy, the fat or thin, the sad, the pensive, the energetic or whatever a model is conveying. There is also some of my own mood at the time. I hope that seeing another person on the surface of the work can elicit a connection with the viewer that gives a piece of life. I have been fascinated by the work of Eric Orr who explored alchemy by combining fire, water, lead and gold. I often juxtapose silver or gold with the figure because one has an intrinsic value just by virtue of being human and the other has value imposed by society."
